Battle in Cabinet likely as Lawson plans more cuts

Mr Lawson last week introduced an emergency £1,000m package of spending and unspecified state asset sales in an attempt to put this year's expenditure plans back on course. The speed at which he conducted the operation has angered some of his collegues.

The opening bids from the spending departments for 1984-85 are expected to be some £5,000m over the £126,400m envisaged in the February White Paper on public expenditure. However, it has now emerged that Mr Lawson may be seeking a reduction in that February projection.

Strong opposition is certain when the Cabinet has its first meeting on the annual review of advance public spending plans, known as PESC, before the summer recess, probably on Thursday, July 21, when the global totals for the next three

After the Cabinet has agreed broad approach to spending next year, the detailed argument will begin with a series of "bilateral" meetings during the summer and autumn between the individual spending minis-ters and Mr Peter Rees, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

Even before it became apparent that Mr Lawson might want to revise the overall total, the talks had promised to be tough. Quite apart from the battle over the 1984-85 spending target, MPs are still expecting "readjustments"

Although Mr Lawson is said to regard last week's corrective measures as "adequate", the Treasury figures apparently show public borrowing at some £3,000m above the Budget figure of £8.200m.

There are gorowing signs of anxiety among the Conservative "wets" at the prospect of further cuts. Although there was no coordination of effort. a large number of Tory MPs spoke during the Queen's Speech debate about the need for the Government to make the reduction of unemployment a higher priority even than the reduction of inflation.

But as youths dressed in khaki uniform chanted "IRA, IRA, up the IRA" outside the gates leading to Classicbawn Castle, where the Mountbatten family spent their summer holiday, traders and local people in Mullaghmore, co Sligo, showed their anger at the decision to hold the rally in the Holidaymakers stayed away from the beautiful hay, which should have been experiencing its busiest weekend of the holiday season; all shops and hotels closed; no milk or newspapers were brought into the village and, instead of the 5,000 to 10,000 people who would normally have crowded the beach, only about 150 were on it, as the rally began.

The organizers also faced some embarrassment when one local independent councillor accused the IRA of fanning the flames of sectarianism and glamourizing militarism. This led to slow hand-clapping, pro-IRA chants and shouts of "join your bloodsucker Mountbatten from an angry crowd, which in the end forced him to abandon his speech. Four local councillors, the uncle of a man acquitted of murdering Lord Mountbatten and Mr Owen Carron, formerly MP for Fermanagh and South Tyrone, defended their right to hold the rally in Mullaghmore, honoured the 10 hunger strikers who died two years ago and called on Britain to get out of Ireland.

One hotel owner said that a coach party of 47 had cancelled their five-day stay. "They can have the village, but they will never come here again. They will never buy another thing here. £1m tennis spending defended

Lawn Tennis Association and All England Club officials yesterday defended the decision to spend £1m on improvements at the Queen's Club in west London, and said the move would not affect loans to other clubs.

Although Queen's Club is owned by the Lawn Tennis Association it is run as a private club, and a weekend press report suggested that the largest investment in British tennis outside Wimbledon was being lavished on a privileged few. Apparently the money for the improvements at Queen's does ot come from the every resources of the associations but from a debenture share issue, One of the requirements of raising such money is that it must b spent on capital improvements.

The money to be spent is, therefore, different from that spent on other clubs and will not affect loans to other clubs at all, although the fact remains that loans elsewhere totalled a much smaller sum last year. Work will begin in October on renewing the existing facilities at the Queen's Club and continue, when planning permission has been obtained, with four new indoor courts.

That should help to maintain the reputation of Wimbledon as the world's premier event by improving the practice facilities, and should also go a little way to remedying the lack of indoor courts that has held British tennis back in the past 20 years. Both Sir Brian Burnett, chairman of the All England Club and Mr James Cochrane, president of the Lawn Tennis Association, were reported to be angry yesterday at what they regarded as misleading reports.

Covered courts at Queens will be available not only for Wimbledon practice but for the Stella Artois championships, and it could be argued that such improvements are overdue. Sir Brian also denied a report that Wimbledon termis would be played under lights for the first time in its 106-year history. At this stage Wimbledon is apparently only experimenting with the possibility and might decide it was too expensive.

The nurses, all students, live on the first floor of the fivestorey hostel and along with 250 other nurses living there, share just one washing machine.

At night many of the nurses are frightened because two entrances to the hostel supposed to be closed at 10pm are left permanently open, with no special security, "Any stranger can come and go as he pleases." one nurse says.

Hostels such as St Helier's are creating increasing dissatisfaction and even anger among thousands of Britain's nurses. But, as the health service conpemplates a fresh round of cutbacks, the nurses see little sign of improvement.

At St Helier's, built in the 1930s, two of the five floors have been refurbished. But plans to improve the remainder have been shelved because of especially those working shifts. One factor affecting hostel conditions is that nurses' homes have difficulty in sleeping because of noise as their are not subject to inspection by health and safety officers as colleagues move around in linocovered rooms and corridors. Since 1981 the health authorities have been encouraged to charge "realistic" rents for accommodation and most nurses pay between £35 and £45 a month. Many had to pay back-dated rent rises earlier this year in the same month in which they got their pay rise. In some cases the rent rise exceeded the pay rise.

There is no national system for running the hostels. Some health authorities leave it to the individual hospitals, others run them directly.

Guidelines for nurses' accommodation laid down in 1964 recommended: Each person requires a separate bed-sitting room for sleeping, studying, reading writing etc with wash-ing facilities.

There should be one bath (or shower) one we, and one kitchen utility room for every four to six persons. Only one hostel visited by The Times came up to that standard, ten others visited or telephoned fell short on several

Lack of freedom and privacy. Several nurses complained they were treated like children. Lack of places to store food. Between .20 and 30 nurses frequently have to share a fridge and food can be pilfered from it. Many keep food in their rooms, but that brings in ants and cockroaches.

Although the Department has recommended setting up residence committees in the hostels, few have them.

Three case histories are given on the left.

None of the 19 nurses contacted by The Times would agree to the use of their names in an article. They all said they were afraid of being victimized or labelled as militant.

to tackle loan shark menace

By Derek Harris, Commercial Editor

Public's help sought

Loan sharks who trap mostly the disadvantaged into a whirl-pool of debt and then resort to regressive methods to ensure repayment got a warning yester-day from Sir Gordon Borrie, Director General of Fair Trading.

Sir Gordon, who wants to curb the loan sharks, said local authority trading standards departments and his Office of Fair Trading needed "the cooperation and sometimes the courage" of the public in enforcing legislation which could stop illegal moneylenders. At the same time the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux said the activities of moneylenders charging extortionate rates of interest were growing. It was particularly affecting inner-city areas where the unemployed single-parent families sorted to moneylenders as the only means of raising loans. The loan shark menace has been increasing for 18 months, the association said. Of five million inquiries last year to bureaus around the country, a 12 per cent increase on the previous year, a fifth concerned debt auestions. The sharks put pressure on debtors in several ways, the association reported. Women who had raised loans without their husbands' knowledge were threatened with disclosure to the husband. Vans marked "debt collection" were parked outside debtors' home to cause them embarrassment with neighbours. There has been cases of bricks being thrown through windows.

Sir Gordon described a favourite gambit by the loan sharks: illegally taking supplementary benefit or family allowance books as security against loans.

At Netherley, Liverpool, where there is a high unemployment rate and a large single-parent population. Miss Char-lotte Anderson, the local advice bureau organizer, said she knew of cases where family allowance books had been impounded for as long as 11 years as debtors were trapped into a cycle of Last year the Netherley bureau handled 7,000 inquiries, half of which related to debts. The Office of Fair Trading gave an example of one couple who borrowed £50 25 years ago to set up a home. This year, after a series of reloaning arrangements, they still owed

£2,500, including interest. Real rates of interest being charged by loan sharks can be well over 1,000 per cent when worked out on an annual basis. Traders dealing in credit of more than £30 a loan must be licensed by the Office, Sir Gordon said public help was

In January, the parties to the talks, Pakistan and the Karmal regime in Afghanistan, agreed that the pull-out of Russian troops, and cessation of "outside interference", would take place at the same time.

In April the "proximity" talks in Geneva under which the two sides never met -Pakistan does not recognize the Karmal regime – moved rapidly over the ground that an agreement would cover, and let to euphoric statements about the likely success of the talks.

Señor Cordóvez was quoted as saying the agreement was 95 per cent completed and Mr Sahabzada Yaqub Khan, the Pakistani Foreign Minister, was making distinctly optimistic So the disappointment after

It has been known for at least two years that Mr Frigyes Puja, aged 62, Foreign Minister since 1973, had asked to be relieved of his post for personal reasons. But the choice last week of Mr Peter Varkonyi, aged 52, as his successor came as a surprise to political observers here.

Only last year Mr Varkonyi was appointed secretary for international affairs on the party Central Committee, and reshuffles in the upper reaches of the party usually do not happen so quickely in eastern block countries.

Observers also note that the post Mr Varkonyi left is considered to rank higher than his new appointment.

They say the move appears to be a political compromise to bolster the position of Mr Janos Kadar, the party leader, of

HOW can ready-prepared investment schemes really be fresh?

An investor may seem defficient if he presents you with a scheme as soon as you walk through the door.

But usually such swiftness means you're getting a standard package off the shelf.

That wouldn't matter if an investment scheme was no more crucial than a chicken leg or a pound of mince.

However, your company's future could depend on that finance and in particular on the way it's structured.

Ideally it should fit your needs precisely.

And as nobody else has exactly your cash requirements, tax liability or the same equity position, that means an investment scheme custom made.

At Investors in Industry, we've more than 37 years' experience tailoring long-term and permanent capital for businesses of every size.

Over £2 billion so far.

It's helped to establish companies and assisted with growth.

In each case our first job has been to take a close look at the company and the people who run it.

Not to interfere, but in order to see clearly how best we can help.

Often the most appropriate solution has come from an innovative approach.

For instance, in one case we found a way to make a fixed rate loan at below the market interest rate.

It involved taking share warrants in our client's North American parent.

Another innovation has been our 'droplock' loans.

They enable us to offer competitive, variable interest rates which can be 'locked', or converted, to a fixed rate within an agreed period.

We also pioneered management buy-outs.

Because we understood the special position of the managers involved, we were able to create a form of finance that made buy-outs possible.

At the heart of our ability to innovate is an unrivalled combination of financial, commercial and industrial skills.

It's made us one of the most important sources of investment capital in this country.

Perhaps some of that finance could be helping your company.

But don't ask us how we'd package it.

We'd need to sit down and get to know each other before answering that one.

Investors in Industry.

It is 19 years since Omar Sharif galloped across the world's screens in Lawrence of Arabia. Next month, he returns to the stage after driving a generation of women frantic and men to drink. 'I think I started out with an enormous amount of talent', he says. 'Now I am going to find out whether I have totally wasted it or not'.

Old Brown Eyes is back

By Sally Brompton

After a quarter of a century spent another for 15 years, it would occur to playing the kind of film roles that have driven women frantic and men to drink, Omar Sharif is returning to his first love: the stage. And for his reappearance on the boards, the Egyptian actor has picked the Chichester Festival Theatre, where next month he opens in Terence Rattigan's The Sleeping Prince, playing Prince Regent of Carpathia, the character immortalized by Laurence Olivier in the film The Prince and the Showgirl

After a movie career more memorable for his much-acclaimed liquid brown eyes than for his acting ability, it would seem an unnecessary risk for a performer who has been a millionaire several times over and can still command £500,000 or so for three weeks' filming. Omar Sharif is well aware of the dangers but explains: "I think I started out with an enormous the much-chronicled charm is greatly amount of talent. Now I'm going to in evidence. So is the courtesy. His find out whether I've totally wasted it manners are as immaculate as his

It is 19 years since he first galloped across the world's movie screens astride a camel in Lawrence of Arabia. Dr Zhivago and Funny Girl followed, confirming a buccaneering image which was then exploited in a string of highly forgettable films.

Sharif is the first to acknowledge their mediocrity. "I've played a lot bad parts because they were all I was offered. And I needed the money. Now I've arrived at the point in my life where I want to work for pleasure.

It is a luxury he admits he can afford only by accepting the occasional film part to subsidize his extravagant lifestyle. "I am not rich", he says, "but I live like someone who is very rich indeed". He has gambled away several fortunes in his lifetime, because, he them. "Just think of it . . . I was claims, of the intense boredom, married at 21, an actor, surrounded by frustration and loneliness involved in making an honest bob or two.

"If you lived quite alone in hotel rooms, moving from one country to pretty girls, and I never once cheated on my wife. Of all my achievements in life, I think that is what I'm most proud of".

Since the parting, speculation about his love life has dominated tabloid newspapers the world over. It has, says Sharif, been greatly exaggerated. "Contrary to what people think, I haven't had a lot of different girlfriends. I've gone out now and then with a girl because you have to. You can't live totally alone. I've had very short relationships, sexual relationships, but no more than anyone else. Many fewer, in fact. All my friends have more girls than I've ever had"... He has nothing against remarrying - "aithough it's a bit late in the day" but after 20 years he has grown accustomed to living alone. "I'm very independent now; I'm not sure I'd be able to live with someone else again".

The only son of a wealthy timber merchant, he was brought up in Cairo, where he had an "extraordinarily nice" childhood. He attended Victoria College, the finest school in the Middle East, along with such diverse embryonic celebrities as King Husain and Adnan Khashoggi. ("If they wanted to", he says, "the people who went to my school could run the world"). He recollects being good at everything a sifted scholar, captain of football and cricket: president of the debating and dramatic societies and head boy.

It was acting, however, that fired his ambition, spurred on by a doting mother who was determined that her son would become a star. Even today he is closer to his mother than to any

"I really am a mother's boy. I adore her and she adores me. She's not just proud of me - she faints when she sees me. She gets hysterical. If she were here now she'd want me to sit on her knee.' A widow now, she lives in Spain but mother and son talk to each other on the telephone constantly. "She asks my advice about everything. Everything. Even when my father was alive I was always head of the family and they have always all asked my advice and done exactly what I say.

In the past Sharif has named actresses Barbra Streisand and Anouk Aimée as the objects of his affection, adding, curiously: "To have an affair with someone doesn't mean you have to go to bed with them." Now he confesses: "I've been in love four times in my life, each time to a famous actress. But I wouldn't say I actually enjoyed it because on each occasion) knew it wouldn't last. Actors and actresses are married to their careers atic in my relationships and western first. Acting is too important to allow. you to love someone at the same

The main problem, he says, is that he never meets any "normal" women. "I only ever meet actresses and secretary like other men do." He added as an afterthought: "An intelligent one;

Anyway, he is much more comfortable in the company of men. All his friends are men. "I find men very silly, actually, but I like their silliness. The child in me wants other children to

to make a film assembly asked me to make a film especially for them. I chose a story of a higher standard than they're used to, to try to bring some culture into their homes.

After staying away from his homeland for many years, during the Nasser regime, he now goes back regularly.

Now he enjoys the indulgence of just sitting around and talking with his own countrymen. "I find it very difficult to make real friends in the West because I'm very sentimental and melodramneonle are very cold fish. They don't like you to hug and kiss them."

Even women, apparently, get over-whelmed by his affection. "I'm very demonstrative with women, very emotional I'm like a little dog, socialites. I'd love to meet a nice actually. But it's not enough. They need other things as well." He admires women enormously, their intelligence, not some silly girl."

Another hazard, it seems, is his as for liking them - well, he is not too reputation as a womanizer. When sure about that.

In any event, his entire attention for immediately on their guard, even the time being is focused on the hostile. "It takes such a long time to get demanding role of Prince Regent of all that stuff out of their minds, just to Carpathia. Just learning the lines is a

Watch your cruising speed

Last Wednesday, in the middle of the watching 2ft of floodwater swirl round my gunwale and it occurred to me yet again that we British are always taken completely unawares by conditions like these, for all the world as if we had never done any underwater motoring before in our lives.

So today I am going to answer the most common questions asked about this pretty out absorbing pastime. Cut this column out and keep it in your glove compartment. On second thoughts, cut it out and paste it to the roof above the driver's seat.

How do I know when I have hit flood water?

The first thing you will notice, especially at night, is a great pillar of water rising on either side of your car. Momentarily you will have childhood memories of those funfair big dippers which shot down a ramp and hit a tank of water at 30 mph. If you cannot remember your childhood, you will probably have memories of going in a channel ferry and hitting a very big wave. If by now the car has come to a standstill, you will get out to have a look. A moment later you will be sorry you did so.

What should I do if the car refuses to move through the water?

Rather than sit in your seat and wait to be drowned, it is best to manoeuvre yourself through the window and on to the roof. This can be tricky: and it's best to practise at home before you set out. Even when on the roof you are, don't forget, still legally in charge of the car and must wear a seat belt. The average modern belt is long enough to reach to the roof.

What if I'm parked illegally?

Although this has never been tested in a court of law, parking regulations in Britain are thought to apply only to motoring on land. There are no regulations as far as I know against parking in a navigable river. Yellow lines are probably invalid below water, as well as being impossible to see. But remember that the laws of the sea will apply to your car, which is now theoretically an ocean-going vessel.

Will I have to hoist a flag or something?

No, no. Navigation lights will be quite enough - red on the passenger side, green on the driver's side and a white light on top of the wireless arial. Cars give way to lorries, and company cars should, as a matter of courtesy give way to private cars. Salvage laws also come into operation, and if you find an abandoned car it is theoretically, while in water, all yours for

How can I go about getting help?

The first people to come by will almost certainly be a TV outside broadcast van. getting pictures for the local news. Refuse all offers of help from them. All they want to do is tow you into deeper water for a better picture. And before they start filming, haggle about money with them. This is the only language they understand. Try asking them for a form which will allow you to claim against the car as overnight accommodation. If anyone else comes past, just ask them to pull you to dry or at least exposed ground. You may have to go through certain simple Customs formalities, but as long as you started your journney in Britain and are not carrying drugs you should be all right.

Can the driver of an underwater car have the power, like ships' captains, to marry passengers on board?

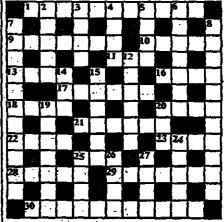

Only if you are a vicar. It is a total myth about ships' captains. But a brief shipboard romance can do no harm and will while away the time until the waters recede.

Is there nothing else I can do to get help? Yes. Send forth a dove on the face of the

The fear that drink will rot the brain has now been partially com-firmed for the too fortified over-forties at least. Mark Goldman and colleagues at Wayne State University kept 31 alcoholics off the bottle for three months.

After two to three weeks without a drink, young alcoholics recovered completely. They were as good as their sober controls at fitting pegs into holes at speed, at matching patterns and leaving matching the speed of moving objects. and keeping track of moving objects. But those who were older than 40 did not recover even after three dry months. The most surprising finding. Goldman claims, is that this failure to recover has nothing to do with how long subjects had had a drink problem. Some men over 40 had been alcoholics for only four years; others for 35 years. Neither group managed to get their visual and spatial performance back to normal. The moral seems to be drink till you're 40 and then join a temperance club.

Pavlov's dogs are among the most famous beasts in psychology. One can only wonder what Pavlov would have made of Daniel Tortora of RemBeh-Con Inc (which must stand, I suppose, O Brave New World, for Remedial Behaviour Conditioning Inc.). Tortora has spent years in "the elimination of avoidance-motivated aggression in dogs". He has devised a training programme in which dogs learn to programme in which dogs learn to play and are given a variety of challenges so that they conquer fear and their desire to snart, snap and bite. Tortara thinks humans can also be trained to be "prosocial" with a ""safety training programme" in which "safety training programme" in which Immigrant groups are complaining that far too many blacks in Britain end up in psychiatric hospitals. The values of psy-chiatrists are white; the criteria by which patients are judged same or insame are those of a white society. A rumbustious Rastafarian may convince a psychiatrist all too easily that he needs a spell in the bin. What is playful in culture may appear pathological in ours. In Los Angeles, a survey of 1,003 families has tried to discover whether blacks, "Anglos" or Hispanics expressed depression in different ways. Crudely put, were the blues of "whites" the same blues as the blues of blacks? Members of the 1,003 families were interviewed for an hour and a quarter. Questions covered everything from how often they had thought of suicide to how many pleasant thoughts they had daily. The results showed that there seemed to be little difference between the groups' experiences of depression. The Hispanics, however, reported fewer feelings of well-being than the others

The Kansas psychologists found meditators tended to have a higher heart rate and diastolic blood pressure before they started meditating than the nonmeditators did before they began to take a rest. Experienced meditators certainly reduced, during meditation, their heart rate, blood pressure, breathing rate and skin resistance (a traditional measure of stress) - but to no greater extent than stress) but to no greater extent than did those who just rested. A crucial difference, however, was that those who meditated said they felt much more physiologically relaxed than those who just rested. MODERN TIMES

sideways look at the British way of life

there is an animal in British society more beloved of man than the horse, it is keeping very nuiet. Not even the dog, allegedly my best friend, can inspire the pitch of affection commanded by the equine species. I must confess at the outset that the horse excites in me little more than terror and grudging envy: terror, because of his or her proven ability to fling me into the air like a hay bale, and envy because of his or her capacity to circle Aintree at the speed of a family saloon and be insured for sums of up to £7 million. I feel that with either of these attributes I would enhance incalculably the esteem in which I am held by society in general and my wife in particular.

But as one without such high performance in the areas of speed and stamina, it is my lot to admire those creatures who possess it, and to note, qualities have rendered it so humanoid. I suppose it speaks well for mankind's sense of gratitude that we give the honour of near-equality to animals that have served us so tirelessly in matters military, agrarian and hedonistic. Take this for example, a small zoo news item in The Times last year recording the passing of Sinbad, the horse used by President Reagan when he hosted the Western television series Death Valley Days. Here is the embryo of a respect usually evinced by human obituarists: "Sinbad was retired from show business several years ago and spent his time munching alfalfa and entertaining children". I would attemt a joke about how wrong it is for anyone, horses included, to munch entertaining children, were I not afraid that Sinbad's surviving relatives would sue.

Or take the brief but spirited correspondence on our letters page last December about the matter of honours for horses, after the suggestion that deserving cases be rewarded with medals had been derided in the Commons. One correspondent reminded us that Vonolel, a 14.2 hand grey Arabian, ridden by Lord Roberts in the 313-mile expedition for the relief of Kandahar, recieved by special permission of Queen Victoria the Afghan Medal with four clasps and the Kabul Kandahar mostly with astonishment, the way in which its Star. In 1897 at the ripe old age of 26, wearing his honours, he carried Roberts in the Diamond Jubilee procession.

> These days, of course, the horse's military role is almost entirely ceremonial, and its industrial function has declined dramatically; 35 years ago there were no fewer than 47,000 pit ponies in this country hauling coal for long distances thousands of feet below the surface. Now there are barely 100, retained for drawing supplies through areas of the mines which are either impossible or uneconomic to modernize.

> No such dwindling in the ranks of what might be termed the leisure horse which, in its several manifestations has almost as many sorts and conditions as the human. None is more popular than the child's pony, so often the homely precursor of boys in the affections of a faddist daughter. They (the ponies, not the boys) can still be had for as little as £300 with a little judicious research, but the minefield is well charted: the pony, like the boy of later years perhaps, is outgrown and a replacement sought, with all the attendant heartaches.

> In almost every category, it seems, the impulse towards horse ownership is linked inextricably to the competitive spirit, the child's pony class is no exception, with the ever present lure of the gymkhana and Pony Club. Nor is that of the polo pony, almost always a four-figure investment, and exclusively the province of the AB socio-economic group. Few owner/players would admit to the charge of running upper-class motor bikes, but it is apt enough. Then we have the breeders, whose number includes the Duchess of Devonshire with her Shetlands at Chatsworth and the Queen herself, with her fat black fell ponies at Balmoral. Neither of these ladies, I agree, need feel the need to be competitive, as they are already winners on most conventional criteria, yet can there ever be a total absence of edgy comparison where offspring are concerned? I doubt it.

Finally we come to the Private Drivers and the Trotters, vehicle people, respectively the Duke of Edinburghs and Old Steptoes of the equestrian spectrum, and the Commercial Drivers, of which the Whitbread dray men are the most famous example. For my part, I would be happy with the little piebald mare from the stables on the common, whose back is so low that my feet would scrape the ground reassuringly. And if she is not available, then I shall stick to Shanks's Pony.

FOAL AHEAD The Marchioness of Tavistock Breeder/Owner

I bought my first filly foal in 1965. Until I bought Mrs Moss was getting depressed: it was not a question of how many won, but of how many were not last. I bought her in 1975 in a sale; I saw this pretty little mare standing at £1,800 - it seemed a ridiculous price so I put my hand up. She hadn't reached her reserve and I thought "my husband's going to murder me!" She was in foal, and that was sold for £1,600 the following year which wasn't so bad . . . Then in '78 she had a dreadful time with her foal. I begged my husband to let me keep the foal... We called her Pushy and took her to Henry Cecilo. She won at Ascot, ran eight times and was placed in seven out of her eight races! Mrs Moss is a most remarkable mother, her nine off-spring include Socks Up, Pitstop, Put Upon, and the three-times-out, three-times-winner Precocious. One has to treat one's animals like one's children - to teach them to set their sights as high as possible. I have put all the births in The Times: "To Mrs Moss. a son (or daughter). at Woburn . .

one will deny that a soyaburger is better for you than a bag of chips, but before getting too faddy about food it's as well to reflect on some findings by Dr Ray Roseman, cardiologist and senior research physician at Stanford Research Institute. Dr Roseman believes that health is "a psychosocial rather than a biological state" and to prove it he did some comparative research on groups of Parisians and Americans.

The French sat slumped for hours over long, heavy meals, washed down with wine cemented with Gauloises. The Americans lived more the sort of life advocated by Jane Fonda, the kind that calls for a scattering of wheatgerm and leotards. Not surprisingly, the Parisians had higher blood pressure. They also had less than a third of the heartattack rate of the Americans, which Dr Roseman attributed to the fact that their lives were rich in friends and fun as well as fats and fags. The hanging debate: Teddy Taylor puts the case for restoration

A vote for the moral majority

One of the most interesting features of the capital punishment debate has been the remarkable activity of the liberal-progressive establishment in seeking to create a climate of opinion hostile to measures which it regards as unacceptable.

We have seen in the opinion and news columns of the heavier press a virtual flood of propaganda designed to show that the case for capital punishment is bogus and unfounded and that, in any event, the exercise has no prospect of being implemented.

Last week the formidable and respected Economist abandoned its usual conservative cover for a dramatic "The case against hanging". One of the main points of the three-page article was that capital punishment would result in massive confusion and delays of years because of the appeals which convicted murderers could make to the European Court. It went on: "Britain's membership of a European Convention which almost certainly rules out execution means that appeals from British courts would be further subject to delay, and the penalty would be even more uncertainly applied".

Far from providing scope for further appeals, Article 2 of the European Convention states specifically that: No one shall be deprived of his life intentionally save in the execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law".

immense powers to hear appeals about a vast range of penalties, lawful capital punishment is specifically excluded. And while it is true that a number of European states joined to add a protocol to the declaration on the abolition of the death penalty, the British Government recently made it clear that it would not be bound by this in any way.

MPs have been subjected to a series of statements and opinions from pressure groups and institutions. Recently I had a message from the general secretary of the British Council of Churches advising me that its executive committee and "Christian leaders" had agreed that there was "substantial doubt that capital punishment had any significant deterrent effect".

Home Office figures show that in the 20 years from 1945 to 1964, when capital punishment was in force, and despite a large increase in general crime, there was no increase in the number of unlawful killings. In fact it could be argued that the total actually fell; there were 347 in 1946, and 296

Since abolition the figures have climbed steadily to an average of 590 a year in the last five years. But even if these figures are discounted, surely even the British Council of Churches cannot ignore the sharp increase in the use of guns by criminals since abolition. In the last 10 years, the number of

In short, while the European Court has offences involving firearms has risen from about 1,700 a year to more than 8,000.

There have been repeated news stories that the Government and even the Prime Minister are "secretly" opposed to the reintroduction of capital punishment; that Conservative Whips have been speaking in dark corners to innocent backbenchers; and that even if the vote was in favour, no Bill would be presented for at least two years.

None of these reports has any foundation. I have heard not a breath of any Whip seeking to influence anyone on the issue. and the Prime Minister made it abundantly clear that a positive vote on Wednesday would be followed by a Bill in Government time this session.

The liberal-progressives have won most of the battles, at least until this week. The flood of permissive legislation which has gone through the Commons since the 1960s, and the failure to amend any of these measures, is a tribute to their success. But I believe that their luck is coming to an end and that Wednesday might see the beginning of the fight back by those disparagingly referred to, but accurately described, as the moral

Dr Banda is Life President of both the nation and the Malawi Congress Party (MCP), the only legal political organization. He also acts as Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defence, Justice and Agriculture. ing life without him. The prospect is no less intriguing for the country's neighbours, for under Dr Banda's rule. Malawi has been the odd-manout in southern Africa. Full diplomatic relations were established more than 10 years ago with apartheid-practising South Africa, secret of his impatience with the pretensions of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), whose "diplo-macy of bluff and bluster" he delighted in puncturing in the days when he still bothered to attend its

At home, he spurned the fashionable post-colonial nostrums of free education and health services for the masses, and rapid Africanization of the civil service, emphasizing instead rural development and government support for the peasant smallholder. The result is that while few Malawians have a secondary education, even fewer starve. The country, though very poor, grows enough maize free of the disfiguring shanty towns produced by the exodus of the rural destitute elsewhere in Africa.

Malawi's unique relationship with South Africa has undoubtedly brought material benefits. The South Africans largely financed the construction of the new capital of Lilongwe and the new rail spur linking it to the post of Nacala on the Mozambique coast; and more recently built a 180,000-ton grain silo north of the city, which can store an entire season's marketed maize crop. The price Dr Banda paid, particularly after the collapse white-minority regimes in Angola, Mozambique and Zimbabwe, was to be cold-shouldered and treated as an Uncle Tom by other African states less ready to acknowledge their economic links

In 1980, Dr Banda made a move to come in from the cold by joining the Southern African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC). The aim of this grouping of nine black states is to reduce their economic dependence on South Africa in the first instance by improving port facilities in Mozambique, Tanzania and Angola and the road and rail links serving them. This is of obvious interest for Malawi and other landlocked members of SADCC.

At present, for example, neither Julius Nyerere (Tanzania) and

Banda: in his eighties, but still no

Nacala nor Beira, further south, which are Malawi's natural outlets to the sea, can handle the heavy demands on them. Malawi's tobacco exports, its main foreign exchange earner, have to take an expensive and circuitous route via Zambia. where they are transferred to a pontoon ferry and taken across the Zambezi into Botswana, and thence to Zeerust and the South Africa rail link to Durban.

Malawi's imports are no less badly affected. Some 130,000 tons of fertilizer ordered by Malawi have been held up in Mozambique ports for the past 12 to 18 months, forcing Dr Banda to turn to South Africa for supplies. Similarly, nearly all Malawi's fuel imports come via South Africa, with the result that about half the price of petrol in Malawi is accounted for by transport

While Malawi's special position has to some extent now been accepted by its neighbours, Dr Banda's relations with most other SADCC leaders remain cool at best. He never concealed his dislike for Robert Mugabe. He is barely on speaking terms with Presidents

Samora Machei (Mozambique), and there is a danger of territorial disputes with both their countries should oil ever be discovered in Lake Malawi in economically viable quantities.

Dr Banda enjoys a warmer personal rapport with President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia. Both belong to the Chewa tribe, and both believe there is merit in at least maintaining a dialogue with South Africa. Dr Kaunda irritated other African leaders by meeting Pieter Botha, the South African Prime Minister, under a tree on the Botswana-South African border in Both Tanzania and Mozambique and more recently Zambia, have provided a haven for exiled Malawian opposition groups, none of which appears to have much following inside the country. The most substantial opposition figure is Dr Orton Chirwa, a former Justice Minister, now under sentence of death for treason, having been hared back to Malawi in late 1981.

No Gladstonian liberal himself, Dr Chirwa could be a contender for the succession if he survives (the President can commute the death sentence) and would probably like to pursue a more conventional African foreign policy, though whether he or any one else could now afford to sever diplomatic ties with South Africa is another matter.

It seems that earlier this year Dr Banda suggested devolving some powers on to the shoulders of John Tembo, the governor of the Reserve Bank, possibly by creating the office of Prime Minister or Vice President for him. An unpopular figure, Mr Tembo appears to draw his main strength from the fact that he is the uncle of Miss Cecilia Kadzamira, Dr Banda's official hostess and consort and a woman of considerable power

The move to advance him was opposed by several Cabinet ministers, including Dick Materie and Aaron Gadama, both popular figures who shortly afterwards died in what was officially described as a car accident. Independent sources, however, claim to have eye-witness evidence that they were shot, probably by low-level members of the police, though on whose

Bernard Levin: the way we live now

One more nail in the unions' coffin

The council workers at Merthyr Tydfil have been on strike. The dispute, now settled, did not concern me directly, as in the course of an average week I make little or no use of their services, but it did and does concern the citizens of that picturesque and legend-haunted spot, and most particularly a Mr Francis Pippins, whose wife recently died. The late Mrs Pippins had expressed a wish to be buried in a particular local cemetery, but the municipal gravediggers were among those on strike, the local undertaker was unwilling to cross the picket-lines after having received a threatening telephone call, and Mr Pippins, mindful of his wife's last request, would not agree (this was the reluctant undertaker's advice to the other bereaved people of the area) to have her cremated instead, and to have her ashes stored until the dispute was resolved.

The deadlock was broken by the family and friends of Mrs Pippins. who fallied round and dug her grave themselves, defying the pickets at the cemetery gate and incidentally achieving a notable "first" for the do-it-yourself movement. But when the burial of Mrs Pippins, in the grave dug by her closest circle, was about to take place, it was discovered that the grave had been filled in and turfed over.

Leaders of the union concerned in the dispute denied that any of their members was responsible for this action, and I propose to ignore the denial, on the ground that, try as I may, I cannot summon up sufficient gullibility to believe it.

It is generally agreed that one of the most substantial contributions to the decline of support for the Labour Party at the last two general elections has been the behaviour of the trade union movement; recognition of the fact may be coloured by rejoicing or regret, but I doubt if Mr Eric Heffer himself, surely the most credulous figure since the investors in the South Sea Bubble, would maintain that it is not true. From the "winter of discontent" that felled Mr Callaghan to the buffooneries of

Mr Scargill, and from the antics of "Red Robbo" to the more subtle but hardly less outrageous antics of Welsh Mosso, the unions have for years been sowing a crop that Mrs Thatcher has been effortlessly reaping; whatever the final form of the legislation that Mr Tebbit is to introduce in this Parliament, it will be second in popularity only to a proposal to abolish the income tax, with the additional advantage that it is actually going to happen. Now if you can imagine any action better calculated to reinforce and extend that feeling than what happened at Merthyr Tydfil you must have a nonpareil imagination. Yet there is a paradox in the story, as in most union horror stories. The men who prevented a widower from burying his dead wife, and those who went so far as to fill in her grave when he tried to do so without their agreement, surely did not want to incur public odium for themselves, their organization and the unions in

What was it that, in leading them into behaviour that was not of men but of dogs, simultaneously blinded them to the effect that the action must inevitably have on the people of the area? Tim Jones, who wrote the original Times story of the incident assures me that the filling in of the grave lost the strikers virtually all the remaining public sympathy they had, but the assurance even of so meticulous a reporter as Mr Jones was quite unnecessary: anyone with a quarter of a brain could deduce that that would be the inevitable result. The question is why could the strikers not deduce it?

The answer goes to the heart of the lamentable quality of Britain's trade unions, and constitutes a terrible indictment of the labour movement, of governments of all political stripes, and of our edu-cational system. Nobody has taught these people how to use power.

You may say that the union nower exerted on this occasion was limited; it added to the grief of a man already bowed by sorrow, but that is hardly comparable to the power wielded by an Ahasuerus or a Stalin. True, and fortunate, for in the selfish, irresponsible or down-right wicked use of power, great oaks from little acorns grow. But slight though the power wielded by trade union officials may be, it is not altogether negligible, and in any case that is not my point; the important fact is that power may be used well or ill, positively or negatively, to further or to hamper the advance of

And nobody has ever told the British trade union movement that. (The one man who might have done - George Woodcock, the most thoughtful and substantial of all modern TUC general secretaries took quite consciously the disastrous decision not to attempt to lead the unions at all, and an opportunity was lost that may never recur.) I believe that training in the exercise of power is in essence training in moral quality, but it is not necessary to take so lofty a view; such training is also a means of teaching self preservation, and if the union movement is not interested in discovering the difference between right and wrong it ought at least to equip itself to learn what will, and what will not, enhance its own material interests. Yet it does not.

The American unions, which are much weaker than ours, do not make this mistake, the German ones, which are stronger than ours, do not make it either; the Japanese, which are of a different order altogether, would find the British attitude too bizarre to understand. So much the worse, your average Merthyr Tydfil gravedigger would reply, for a pack of bloody foreigners - a reply which might at first seem conclusive, until you notice that the workers in all three of those countries are very considerably better off than they are here, and if you are capable of believing that there is no direct connexion between the two conditions you must be Mr Heffer himself.

lost in all some £30,000 in wages because of their action, and they simultaneously lowered their standing in the eyes of their neighbours.
Cui bono? And in case anyone is thinking that some profoundly important principle was involved in the strike, let me reveal that it was called because a part-time barmaid was appointed in the local leisure centre and the union claimed that another applicant should have got the job.

This circle will one day be squared. It will happen either because a sufficiently substantial figure will appear, to lead the labour movement in honourable and fruitful paths, who will be so strong and so determined that the labour movement's implacable hostility to being led in such paths will be overcome, or because the labour movement will continue to decline in numbers, strength, support, esteem, intelligence and character until it becomes a small and irrelevant part of our society, of no more consequence than the Flat Earth Society or the guardians of Joanna Southcost's Box.

All the evidence, most lately from Merthyr Tydfil, suggests strongly that they will choose the road to run. So be it; but it must be pointed out that there is an extra irony in this story. Merthyr Tydfil has a good claim to be the birthplace of the modern British labour movement, for it was the constituency that returned Keir Hardie to Parliament from 1900 until his death in 1915. Hardie spent his life, selflessly and devotedly, in hardship and obloquy, to raise the British working man in material sufficiency and - more important - self-respect. I do not think that he would greatly admire the action of those who, in the name the movement he founded and led, tried to prevent a grieving husband from burying his dead wife. But it would be a waste of his time to try to shame them; why, if he were to turn in his grave they would only come out on strike to stop him,

The dark side of this free choice circles these days about hanging. To most people I know in the Labour, Liberal and Social Democratic parties, such conversations feel very odd indeed. Although abolition effectively took place in 1964, the discussion and campaigning was at its most intense some years before, as described in the extract from the Koestlers' autobiography in The Times last week.

It was really a 1950s issue, and many politicians now middle-aged will not have debated the matter seriously since their student days. For me it has an ironically nostalgic flashback quality - as if we were crowning the Queen again, or watching Sedgman win Wimbledon. Or believing that enlightened re-forms once gained were irreversible.

Suddenly we start speculating about individual Conservative colleagues - not, as before, is he a fullblown monetarist or not, is he for or against the abolition of the GLC where does he stand on Fortress Falklands, but simply, is he a hanger? And the question has that same grisly fascination the act itself has always had: voyeuristic, faintly

I recently asked a GLC Tory. a rather right-wing one, I thought, the question direct. He gave me a very long and sour glance, then said he was unable to answer the question without bitterness; he had been rejected by more parliamentary selection committees than he cared to remember because of his refusal to commit himself to voting for restoration. He had tried to evade it. he said, by saying he thought there should be a referendum, but he was not allowed to get away with that. He had to say, yes, he was an out-and-out hanger. And he could not. The same evening I heard a similar story about another very able, thoroughly Thatcherite young Conservative councillor.

If these stories are true, they are confirmation of what many of us have long suspected - that the Conservative Party is becoming more and more like the Labour Party in the way it conducts its most important function, the selection of parliamentary candidates. I expect to hear any day now of MPs being mandated by their local associations to vote for the return of hanging in Wednesday's debate.

There are probably several Tory MPs – less principled than my colleague, or more skilled in equivocation - who are desperately wishing the issue would go away. They no more want a return to the roots if they vote against it. The best thing for them is what the Cabinet has thoughtfully provided: a debate called at such short notice that they can legitimately claim to have a prior engagement. You will probably find that a lot of important family function have been fixed for Wednesday July 13.

How many potentially good MPs have we lost through this dreadful practice of one-issue judgment?

There is a lot of talk in political Trollope's novels portray the cornuption of power through domi-nation by too few interests. Today we see the corruption of power through domination by too few opinions. In both the old political parties there are certain issues which activists now elevate into infallible litmus tests of a candidate's allround suitablity.

The interesting thing about political fitmus tests is that they are not used to assess the loyalty of political aspirants to party policy. The issues chosen are those that are outside, or even against, party policy, the issues local party activists regard as revealing the true colour, so to speak, of the candidate's soul. Is this person really one of us? The answer to this question, yes, or no. will tell us all.

Many litmus test questions (hanging in the Conservative Party, support for Sinn Fein in Labour) are edged with the taste of fear and violence: they are initiation rites, tests of political manhood.

The correct and winning answer will almost certainly be couched in terms that are contemptuous, if not outright abusive, of accepted wisdom on the subject, particularly if that accepted wisdom represents a cross-party consensus. "I'm not afraid to go in and change all that nonsense is the right tone to adopt. It is necessary to sound blunt, abrasive and intolerant (as much like Rhodes Boyson or Dennis Skinner as possible). It is not necessary to know anything about

Now it is wholly right to have new MPs who are fearless catalysts of change. The problem is that the litmus test process is far more likely to produce craven conformists of a new sort: people ready to jump when somebody tells them to jump. During the last year I was in the Labour Party the instruction to jump was being given at shorter and shorter intervals, rather like a sadistic ringmaster going off his head. Support the hunger strikers! Let Tariq Ali join! Defy the NEC over Militant! Break the District Auditor! Boycott the Scarman Inquiry! Disrupt Parliament! Are Conservative associations going to

Whereas the litmus tests that left-wing activists choose are such as to lose votes by the million (just read the list above). Tory litmus tests are far closer to public sentiment. It is an appeal to the darker side of human nature, the side that needs retribution and scapegoats and ritual cleansing, and it is an appeal that grows stronger in times of hardship and uncertainty. It's that we have to worry about most.

Tory cuts come out of the closet campaign Labour spokesman war-ned the electorate that, behind the innocuous vacuities of the published Conservative manifesto, there lurked a hidden manifesto containing the Government's real, discreditable programme. Labour forecast that Mrs Thatcher was preparing to reduce the spending power of pensions and other benefits, to move towards dismantling the National Health Service, to cut dole payments in real terms and to damage the social sector by discriminatory reductions in public expenditure.

These accusations were indignantly denied by the Conservatives, and in the election, it seems by the voters too. Now scarcely a month after polling, Labour is unassailably placed to declare smugly: We always told you there was a hidden manifesto, didn't we?

One after another have come the ninisterial announcements. First Norman Fowler, the Social Services Secretary, told the House of Commons that, though inflation in November will be "around 6 per cent", retirement pensions and other henefits will be increased only by the benefits will be increased only by the May inflation figure, 3.7 per cent. Recipients will accordingly be mulcted of £1.20 a week for a pensioner couple and 75p for a single pensioner.

Mr Fowler was a busy man. A week later he disclosed what he described as his growth plans for the NHS. These, in the terms in which he stated them, mildly encouragingly implied a real increase in expenditure for the next 10 years of 0.5 per cent per annum. This, however, was not guaranteed, but depended on the economy doing well enough to justify such munificence. It was also based on the assumption that the 0.5 per cent growth could be found from internal efficiency savings.

What is more, it completely ignored increased demand for the NHS: the rise in the number of the elderly as a proportion of the population means that simply to maintain the service requires a 0.7 per cent growth above the pay and prices index. So Mr Fowler's 0.5 per cent increase actually turns out to be a cut ranging between 0.7 per cent and 1.2 per cent per annum, with these reductions being kept within that level only if the economy new Chancellor. After his insinnations about the inherent idleness of certain of the unemployed, there was a tremendous flurry of denials that the Government had any baneful designs on their dole money. Next, however, came the Prime Minister's explanation, drafted with painstaking care: "In our manifesto we pledged: 'In the next Parliament, we shall continue to protect retirement pensions and other linked long-term benefits against rising prices. Unemployment ben-efit is not a linked long-term as we explained. Therefore, no long-term pledge about price protection was given. These words can be translated as follows: We lied to the pensioners, but tricked only the unemployed.

The latest instalment came four days ago, with Mr Lawson's abrupt announcement of £500m of spending cuts, with health, the social services and education all designated as prominent victims. On Tuesday Mrs Thatcher had quoted from the published manifesto. On Thursday we were treated to more extracts from the authentic, concealed version. The true nature of what has been taking place was thus described in the Daily Telegraph, symbiotically tuned in as it is to the intricate thought processes of Con-servative ministers: "Some political barriers are felt to have been removed now the election is out of the way.'

Labour, therefore, is justified in saying. We told you so. The problem is that during the election campaign too few voters listened because attention was skilfully distracted by the Conservative Party, which instead managed to convince the electorate that Labour's published manifesto was more of a menace to them than anything the Tories might be hiding. Now, when the Labour warnings are day by day seen to be vindicated, the electorate is still distracted from paying heed.

This time the diversion is an internal leadership election campaign which is lasting as long as an American presidential election campaign. For the next three months, Roy Hattersley, Eric Heffer, Neil Kinnock and Peter Shore are doorned to go around the country each giving reasons why he rather than any of the others should be Prime Minister, when all four ought unitedly to be saying why Mrs Thatcher should not be.

From Sir Ivo Rigby Sir, Whatever may be his present view, it was that great judge, Lord Denning, a man full of wisdom, humanity and profound practical common sense, who said some years ago: The ultimate justification of any punishment is that it is the enviluate denunciation by the emphatic denunciation by the community of a crime".

in these days, where brutal and vicious crime is an everyday fact of life, I venture to suggest that all too frequently far too great an emphasis is placed upon the claptrap of rehabilitation and reformation and not sufficient upon punishment (let us underline that word) and retribution.

The ultimate justification capital punishment for wilful and deliberate murder is that it is, I believe, the will of the vast majority of the peace-loving community of this country, as the emphatic denunciation by the community of the most serious of all crimes. If that, indeed, be true, then let it be 4 Reynolds Close, NW11.

Your faithfully,... IVO RIGBY. l Dalmeny House, Thurloe Place, SW7.

From Mrs Susanne Dell. Sir, In your leader of July 1, you argue powerfully why the death penalty should not be restored. But there is a change in the law relating to murder which it would be worth making namely to give to judges the power to impose whatever length of sentence they consider appropriate.

Some of the present argument centres on the fact that the courts cannot in their sentencing discriminate between different cases of murder. The husband who kills his terminally ill wife out of compassion has to be given exactly the same ace as the armed robber who kills for gain - mandatory life imprisonment. It is then the Parole Board which decides what sentence each should serve.

To deprive the courts of their sentencing powers in murder in order to give them to the Parole Board has little merit. The judges are far better equipped to fulfil the sentencing function: they have fuller information, their proceedings are public, and their decisions can be appealed against. Since 1957, judges have successfully exercised their sentencing discretion in the case of the most unpredictable group of all killers - the mentally disordered diminished-responsibility homicides. They should be given the same discretion in sentencing for murder.

> Irish dimension From Mr B. F. O'Grady

Sir, As a graduate in history from an Irish university now resident in the UK, I read with interest the letter (July 2) which Professor J. C. Beckett and other eminent historians signed outlining their objections to the return of hanging. These historians, many of whom are noted for a "revisionist" view of Irish history, have drawn attention leaders of the Dublin rebellion in 1916 led to the alienation of moderate opinion in Ireland and subsequent support for armed resistance to The Royal Irish Constabulary and the Army. Yes, martyrs" were created in 1916, but combination of other factors, ie, the reign of terror unleashed by the "Black and Tans" and international support for the Irish nationalist cause, led to the eventual withdrawal of the British Forces from the South in 1922.

However, since the establishment of the Free State the Irish Government have often acted ruthlessly against any terrorist group who sought to overthrow the state. Mr Cosgrave, Eire's first Prime Minister, had scores of republican terrorists executed during the 1920s and many others fled (including Michael Flannery) to the USA where they found support for their uncompromising beliefs. De Valera also executed terrorists when he faced a similar threat to his power in the 1930s. There is therefore a certain empathy between the citizens of Eire and those of the UK when it comes to dealing with terrorist groups. This is based on a maturity which the in responsible government since 1922. The execution of a terrorist in Ulster for shooting a member of the security forces would, in my opinion, be seen by many in the South as a legitimate action by a sovereign government to maintain law and order in its own state.

While Professor Beckett and others have rightly warned of the perils inherent in executing Irish terrorists in Ulster it must also be realised that there is a body of opinion in the Republic which sees the return of hanging as a first step in lowering the level of crime in both Eire and the UK. Abolition of GLC

From Mr Barry Jones

Sir, David Walker's excellent articles on the GLC (Spectrum, June 29) highlight the incontrovertible case in favour of the abolition of the GLC. As a former Labour member of Parliament I strongly favour the abolition of the GLC and the transfer of all existing duties and services to the London boroughs, with the exception of a number of strategic functions like those associated with land use, transportation (including highways) London transport and refuse disposal, which should be incorporated in a new

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Sir, The decision in Richards v Richards (Law Report, July 1) makes urgent a review of the divorce law. Suppose a marriage breaks down but the parties are unable to use (and unwilling to fake) the conditions for immediate divorce (adultery, "behaviour") or one of them (for tactical reasons?) will not petition. Divorce can be had only after senaration for two or five years.

If a husband, unwilling or unable to look after the children, refuses to leave the home, despite the more modest requirements for housing a single man, either the mother must leave with the children, or she must stay and live a "separate" life under one roof (hardly desirable or even possible where there are children) or be denied a divorce.

If she leaves, in order to satisfy the conditions for divorce, you apparently regard with equanimity (leading article, July 2) the fact that this may seriously compromise the children's welfare and that the courts should refuse to ameliorate their position.

In fact, the decision in Richards does not dictate this consequence, because it leaves open what is to be done if the needs of the children conflict with the interests of one adult vis-à-vis the other. This itself is unfortunate because these de-cisions will be left to the unguided discretion of judges in the same manner as the (much criticized) present maintenance law.

If the conflict is not resolved in accordance with the children's needs the hollowness of the protestations that, in divorce, the children should suffer the least is revealed.

The genuineness of our allegiance to children's interests becomes apparent only when they no longer coincide with the adults' interests and perception but conflict with them. But children have no votes and form no pressure groups. They are rarely represented in divorce proceedings. They seldom write to The Times. Their interests are under a growing threat. Sir, Whilst I agree with much of your comment (July 2) on the House of Lords decision in Richards v Richards (The Times, July 1) relating to ouster orders, I am depressed by the views expressed in the last paragraph. From Miss Hilary Muggridge Sir, The Medical Research Council, in a television programme on June 21, revealed that their recent research into the effects of unemployment seems to point to the conclusion that the longer a man is unemployed the more likely he is to attempt suicide. Kenneth Clarke, the Health Minister's, response to this disturbing revelation was as follows:

Sale of venison

From Sir David Scott

Sir, Dr Fletcher (July 6) seems to imply that venison has no specific flavour of its own until it starts to putrefy. This is not so. It has a flavour as distinct, say, from beef as beef has from mutton or hare from rabbit. He also says that build wounds and inadequate bleeding produce a gamey flavour. This does not apply to park deer, almost always fallow, which are invariably killed by rifle shot in the head and have their throats cut immediately to promote bleeding. This method of slaughter has no effect on the flavour of the flesh.

He also suggests that the "fresh" deer flesh he sells from red deer killed at three years old has "the authentic taste enjoyed by our ancestors." This is improbable. In the first place the fallow deer of the old deer parks would have had a better flavour than that of red deer and any of our ancestors owning a deer park would have scorned to eat fresh three-year-old deer, when he could have six or seven-year-old

From his Honour Judge Curtis-Ralcigh

Sir. On reading Lady Frances Berendt's letter (July 2) about heating being on at the Bloomsbury and Marylebone County Court on June 18 I thought at first that it must have been heat engendered by some brisk litigation, or something to do with the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo: but no, she was quite

Open education From Mr Norman Evans

Sir, In view of the letter from the Vice-Chancellor of the Open University which you published on June 28, commenting on the Further Education Unit's recent project report, Curriculum Opportunity, may I put the record straight as to what I wrote (para 112) under the heading "Experimental learning is

One could be simple that instances do exist but were not discovered within the limited scope of the work. If such practices do indeed exist, information about them would be particularly valuable. But if this finding is valid, it means that the higher and further education system as a whole could be more flexible than it is, within current regulations. current regulations.

Warm yet undemonstrative. unpretentious to the point of shyness, Geoffrey Paul showed remarkable flair for getting alongside the Indian students from all the denominational backgrounds that had made up the Church of South India. He also won the confidence of leaders in the ancient Syrian Church and among the Mar Thoma Christians, And, somewhat to their alarm, he seemed able to make good relations with many of the Communist leaders who were the ruling party in the State of Kerula. The two short commentaries

THE ARTS

The big houses are having to collaborate to beat the squeeze, writes Paul Griffiths

Beggar's opera?

Opera has always been an expensive art. If it is not now to shrivel, special efforts are needed, and the nature of those efforts is becoming abundantly clear as the major houses announce their plans for next season. In Paris next January Die Entführung is to be mounted in a joint production with La Scala. At Covent Garden the evidence of economy is still more pronounced: of seven new productions, four will be borrowed in some manner from other theatres.

This is not altogether new, and certainly not in this country, where opera com-panies have always had to cut their cloth with unusual finesse. Scottish Opera and the Welsh National have collaborated on Mational have common and many occasions, notably on the cycle of Janacek operas which Cardiff brought to its contact autumn. Royal Opera, might reasonably feel wary of indulging in this look like a change of policy. trade. If the same productions were too often to be seen at should have come about. Covent Garden and the Metro-Covent Garden has tried doing certain world travellers; more importantly, it could dull the with the previous production enthusiasm of the singers, there of Manon Lescaut: it destroy any sense of house style proved eminently successful in and lead, more than happens the case of Elijah Moshinsky's already, to performances that are routine and synthetic.

never been against borrowing productions from other houses or mounting joint productions. In fact, though, such occasions have been rare: a Lombardi decade ago, a Falstaff produced in association with Los Angeles and Florence last year, and a whence the Coliseum will be Manon Lescaut taken faute de mieux from Hamburg earlier However, a company of this season. In the light of this international standing, like the record, the borrowing of four productions next season has to

It is not hard to see why it politan, this would be a bore for productions on the cheap. It proved notoriously disastrous staging of Peter Grimes - which incidentally, has been much loaned to other house. Clearly it Sir John Tooley, general loaned to other house. Clearly it director of the Royal Opera, is an economy better practised insists nonetheless that he has on operas of a spare visual character - Grimes, or perhaps Wozzeck - but certainly not suited to those which require opulence, spectacle and magic.

Covent Garden has also tried doing almost without new productions: this season, partly by accident, there has only been one. Semele, plus the borrowed Manon Lescaut. But this 100 will not do. An opera house's langels are ever prone to fade and crumble. It will not keep an expert technical staff if it offers them no new challenges, and it will not keep an audience if all it can offer are occasional new voices in the same old clothes. There are already ancient Royal Opera productions which could well be retired. The prospect of the backlog becoming even greater is not one to ponder for

To borrow and to combine resources are then the only practical solutions for an opera under financial duress, and the economic advan-tages are considerable. Next February Covent Garden will be taking Cologne's Andrea Chénier for about a third of the cost of a new production, paid as a hire fee and in transport costs. Last season the house got its new Falstaff for 60 per cent of the budget, the remainder being divided between Los Angles and Florence, where the production was to be staged for ust a single run, London keeping the sets and costumes. These are two of the possibilities. First a straight borrowing of the production and all its impedimenta, agreed either after the production has been seen (as with the San Francisco Esclarmonde next season at Covent Garden) or at an earlier stage as happened in the case of Andrea Chenier. Second, a collaboration arranged in advance. But other mechanisms of working together are possible. The double bill of L'Efant et les sortileges and The Nightingale, which will be staged at Covent Garden in September, will have new scenery and costumes after the designs that David Hockney did for the Metropolitan, and John Dexter will be adapting his production for the Royal Opera House, just as Lotfi Mansouri will be coming to take charge of his Esclarmonde and Michael Hampe of his Andrea Chénier, Indeed, Covent Garden would always require that the original producer, designer and lighting designer, or their assistants, were available, Companies borrowing from the Royal Opera have to abide by the same condition.

What may still make collaboration awkward is an immense агтау of practical difficulties The Covent Garden stage does not have facilities that productions in other theatres may assume: scenery cannot, for instance, be rolled off to the side. Also, our fire regulations tend to be more stringent than those of other countries, so that scenery may have to be reconstructed in other materials. There may also be problems quite simply in fitting a production made for one stage on to another.

For all these reasons and others, combined efforts among opera houses are unlikely to become much more numerous than they will be next season at Covent Garden. It is, in particular, hard to imagine that it would be worthwhile for a company to bring in a foreign production of a standard-repertory piece, likely to be needed every other season. But borrow-ing, copying and sharing may bring us all more rare and new works, enlarging an operation experience that has to be stimulated too by productions that a company creates for itself according to its own lights.

PUBLISHING Winning ways

once met an author who had not won a literary award, at least not for decades. His name thing like that.

Up to a point, I jest. Graham Nobel Prize for Literature, although his name is bandled about every year - not by the up. The late Betty Trask, a Swedish Academy which hitherto forgotten and out-of-awards the Nobels - as being in print romantic novelist, has some short list, but he is probably regarded as too popular, too mainstream. Nor has he won what was, until the other day, the best-paying British prize, the Booker. Sensibly, he does not allow his publishers, the Bodley Head, to submit his work for prizes,

British literary prizes have proliferated over the last few years. It is in the lazy summer months that many are presented at embarrassing little cere-monies, while authors or their publishers are preparing other submissions for the autumn round. The National Book League, which "administers" quite a few of the awards, arranged for Iris Murdoch – who in 1978 distributed to the needy most of her own Booker winnings – to hand out envelopes containing various sums. The fashionable Lisa St Aubin de Teran received two prizes for her first novel, including the Somerset Maugham, worth £1,000. Mr Maugham intended his prize to enable authors under 35 to travel: Ms de Teran, who has lived in South America, must be one of the most travelled young British authors around. The Hawthornden, perhaps the most distinguished of all - judging by previous recipients - is for an author under 41, and is worth £500. Timothy Mo, who has just won it, should clearly resign all his other jobs immediately and write his third novel on the munificent hand out. The truth is that there is a ludicrous number of awards on offer ranging from, say, the Arthur Markham Memorial Prize for manual workers in or about a coal mine or - to extend dramatically potential winners

Might the young Jane Austen have been eligible, or George Eliot, or Charlotte and other Brontes? He, or most likely she, should receive not less than £40,000 each year.

Like many others. Ms Trask's will requests the Society of Authors to "administer" the prize. The first joke is that she did not herself deign to join the society. The second is that the money derives not from her royalties but from an inheritance. Would it have been preferable if she had paid her subscription to the hard-up Society of Authors and left her money to the Battersea Dogs try, as for years has been the case in France, are bringing literature – as opposed to publishers' underpaying for, underselling and hyping of new books – into disrepute. Most literary prizes are for fiction, and most of the prize-winning books are unread a year or two later. How many Booker or Whitbread or Smith (they tend to go for tradition, for class) prize-winnners can you name. or have you read?

Because most books are selected by more than one person - usually other writers the winner of any prize is likely to be a compromise, a worthy, inossensive, unexceptionable book rather than a firecracker, a subversive masterpiece. There is no harm in literary prizes provided that everybody understands they do not - cannot - go to "the best books". In spite of, usually, the intentions of the donors, they are a device to help promote an otherwise improbable product. Posterity will decide which books should be read in decades to come. When Graham Greene alone (well, almost alone) is not winning prizes it makes you wonder who

Partying on the bloody front line

"Everything is a party," said the man in San Salvador, pausing in his dance to oblige the television crew. Other people were incredulous about a war. didn't know there was one. But there is, of course, and the party man and the others were just a way in to The Front Line, Channel 4's documentary on El Salvador on Saturday night. We cut from the parties to a reortuary and the bloodied body of youth. No one knew who had shot him in Conception Street where they have obviously learned to duck when the bangs start and which has several thriving funeral parlours to house those who fail to or who don't get the chance.

The front line in El Salvador is everywhere and the film crew assiduously and bravely covered the ground: government barracks, guerrilla camps, a raily of the right-wing Arena party, and, finally, the home of the leader of a right-wing death squad. He appeared in silhouette, advisedly in view of his story, to say he was not a monster because he had a wife and children, obviously believthat co-h breeding preclude sin. He admitted to killing 23 people himself. To torture with hot spoons to the eves and blow-torches to the armpits -"the same thing you did in Victnam," he told the interviewer. The trouble with this film, by Jeff Harmon and Chris Wenner, was that it made no attempt to set the way in context, assuming in its audience a grasp of the Latin-American scene that is surely wrong and possibly dangerous. Sensation is no substitute for information.

The long march to BBC's complete Shakespeare continued last night, rather tedious-ly for me, with Cymbeline, the plot of which would make one of Raymond Chandler's thrillers straightforward by comparison. He used to rid himself of surplus characters by having a man come in with a gun. In Cymbeline nearly all survive to the last scene and the great unravelling when boggles the

There was nothing labyrin-thine about David Leland's last offering in Central's Made in Britain series of plays on education: a violent close-up of 16-year-old skinhead (well lapersonated by Tim Roth, who has a future when his hair grows) with a swastika on his brow and, we were led to believe, some intellingence behind it. He rejected us all and that was the message. I reject him - and that's mine.

"I wonder if people are really interested in what actors want to do?" muses Connie Booth. "The trouble is I'm not good at thinking on my feet". She lacks, perhaps deliberately, the range of anecdotes and responses required of most show-business people who are periodically wheeled out by their publicists.

This may be a result of her rather odd career. After a solid background of stage work in America, where she was born, she married John Cleese and came to England in 1968. Cleese had been building up a coterie following in the States but back in England he became a star. His wife had to adjust and her own career ground to a halt for the first few years.

Slowly she began again but appropriately or ironically depending on the point of view it was Cleese who provided her break. She co-operated with him in writing Fawlty Towers and played the role of Polly, the maid whose relative normality created perspective for the mounting lunacy around her. The phenomenal success of the series placed her at once in the instantly recognizable category and also gave her the uncomfortable suspicion that she would be permanently associated with the role.

Kay and Dennis Jelliman are incurable. They're not unhelpable.

Dennis Jelliman came to us some 18 years ago, suffering from multiple sclerosis. Some years later, Kay moved in, also suffering from MS. They met and fell in love. Four years ago they were married from the Hospital. Now they live in a sunny double bedsit in the modern Chatsworth Wing and, although confined to wheelchairs, they visit friends in and out of the Hospital, go on outings, and have had two holidays in Jersey.

We care for some 270 incurable patients like the Jellimans. Skilled nursing, therapy and medical treatment do much. And our new Research and Rehabilitation Wing examines and advances their longterm care. And because it is a home as well as a hospital we also take care to make it a pleasant place in which to live.

Thirty British car component companies have been invited to Moscow in September to negotiate contracts with the Soviet vehicle-building industry.

The companies are aiming to sell or license components and production methods. Russia is interested in diesel engines, instruments, and braking and ciutch systems.

The visit has been agreed with a speed unusual in East-West trade terms. The setting up of a working party under the broad heading of "machinery and industrial equipment" was only sanctioned at a routine inter-governmental trade and technical cooperation meeting in London last month – with another for food and agriculture to examine prospects for processing and packaging. The Branch needed at least 10 companies, otherwise it would have had to scrap the idea of a British pavilion and, indeed, the whole joint venture idea. It was originally hoping for more than 50 companies. Companies appear to have been deterred by stories about depressed demand in the Gulf.

The lack of interest will come as as blow to Britain's Middle East trade advisers who are trying to persuade the Govern ment to set up special bilateral arrangements which could carry British companies more suc-cessfully into wide-ranging projects.

the other parts which is causing concern. Leaving aside the question of whether the Government needs to make another £2bn of spending cuts, there is a cruel irony in the danger that good housekeeping in Whitehall could result in an acceleration of monetary growth, another crucial part of the strategy. The argument is that within the economy as a whole the sum of financial surpluses and deficits should be zero. The implication is that if the Government cuts its deficit, other groups' surpluses will fall or their deficits will rise. If the burden falls most heavily on the corporate sector – as one must assume it would ~ bank borrowing will increase. And that imparts further weighty problems vigour to sterling M3, the indication which is running at 15 per cent annually or twice the strategy's target. Moreover, the money supply problem is very likely to be exacerbated by the natural demand for funds later in the year as companies restock and raise rates of capital investment to take advantage of the expanding economy. But circular connexion between expansion, money supply and borrowing is completed by the probability that government projections for economic growth were optimistic. Tax revenue will therefore be payments higher than anticipated. The easy solution should be issue gilts to soak up the excess money and fund the Government. Last year this was managed with a vengenace when the Government overfunded to the tune of £5 bn. By contrast, there has been no net overfunding ths year and instead the public sector has contributed £2.3 bn to the increase in sterling M3.

But it is just these circumstances which make the City so nervous about accepting government debt. If these money-supply and budget problems persist, they augur badly for infiation.

But issuing paper to give the yields which would quell such fears will push np rates generally when sterling is quite strong enough for most exporters.

In recent years, the Powell Duffryn Group has maintained a high level of capital expenditure and has increased its geographical spread across the world while, at the same time, strengthening its broad base of UK activities.

In his statement to shareholders in the Annual Report for the year ended 31 March 1983 the Chairman, Viscount Sandon, expresses confidence that the Group is well placed to share in the economic growth beginning to come through from the recovery of international trade and industry.

Yesterday at Lord's was one for the connoisseur of slow bowling, the performance in harness of Edmonds and Emburey, on a good batting wicket, being of an exceptionally high standard.

On a scorching morning the lanky Franklin and the New Zealand captain, Howarth, had made so fluent a start against runs and producing five the Middlesex fast bowlers that wickets. Every one of those runs at lunch they had reached 93 without losing a wicket. Jeff Crowe, it is true, had departed temporarily, ducking into a ball from Daniel that kept lower than expected and hit him on the side of the jaw. Maidstone: Kent (4pts) beat Lanca-shire by 63 runs.

Batting collaspes last Wednesday were the ruination of both Kent and

Lancashire in the Benson and Hedges Cup and yesterday Lanca-shire suffered again, collapsing to Underwood Kean, whose problems had seemed the less-seated at the time, found a change of ground brought them considerable satisfaction and a comfortable win that kept and knot, who sai in the cause of quick runs, all the early Kent batsmen got runs. None though got a lot, a fact which owed more to some outstanding Lancashire outcricket than to tight bowling, well as Simmonds and McFarlane both learned.

Walmer's problems had owed something also to a fine and unlucky opening spell by McFarlane, two of his three fours coming off the edge. Until Baptiste came in for a quick slog, Asiett, with his balance, good footwork and straight driving had been the most was by no means assured. The departure of Fowler however exposed the frailties around him.

It was a different matter after lunch. For the whole of the afternoon the left-handed Edmonds, with his lovely high action and taut economical approach, bowled from the Nursery end, with Emburey wheeling away with off-spin from the pavilion. They hardly bowled a bad ball between them, the 40 overs between lunch and tea costing only 63 had to be fought for, and those that did come were mainly singles.
Edmonds's fourth ball of the afternoon, his really quick one, had Franklin late in his stroke and leg-before. Not long after wards a beautifully flighted ball drew Martin Crowe down the pitch, Downton gently remov-ing the bails with the batsman

Now it was Emburey's turn. First Coney, trying to smother the spin, was brilliantly picked up at forward shrot leg, one of three fielders squatting on the edge of the pitch, like cats with their whiskers twitching. Then Howarth, visibly fretting at getting nothing to fasten on, went down the pitch, was beaten in the air, and bowled. Howarth had batted responsibly and vigilantly for nearly four hours, but once the fast bowlers were off his progress became tortoise-like.

Emburey took a third wicket before tea, the wounded Crowe returning to be caught off bat and pad at short leg. Immediately afterwards Edmonds had

venerable By Ivo Teanant

Not for the first Saturday this Not for the first Saturday this season, the more venerable of the cricketing brethren caught the eye. The financial incentive to keep going in the game has never been better, yet, as they will tell you, they play largely for the fim of it.

Take George Sharp, hardly one of the leading batting lights in the game. A good, solid professional, yet 15 years of the county circuit he has game. A good, solid professional, yet 15 years of the county circuit he has never scored a first-class century for Northamptonshire. On Saturday, mainly through employing the mow to good effect, he came within two runs of one against Yorkshire. When out, he kept his disappointment to himself.

Cricketers such as he, Balderstone, Amiss, Alan Jones, Shepberd and Woolmer, some of the day's men in form, have all had to face cricket' slings and arrows, and have gone back for more. Amiss, Jones and Woolmer made centuries; Balderstone and Shepherd dug Leiestershire and Gloucestershire respectively out of trouble. respectively out of trouble.

Indeed, with championship leaders Middlesex playing the New Zealanders - praise be they turned out a full strength side - Amiss could not have chosen a more opportune moment to make his 84th first class 100. It came against challenging for the title. And Andy Lloyd, who must wonder what more he has to do to win an England cap,

There was a century, too, scored by Cowdrey, for Kent, off the Lancashire attack. Thus far it is his best-ever season, which is just as well, for in the wings lurk Potter and others, including his younger brother Graham. Of Colin Counter's these copy he is thought. Cowdrey's three sons, he is thought to have the most potential.

In case it might be assumed that overseas players were for once upstaged. Greenidge almost managed his fourth successive century, batting for Hampshire against Surrey, Instead Marshall, one of the joyous men of cricket, made it to three figures, and, for good measure, picked up two wickets and near removed Monkhouse's big toe in the gathering gloaming.

There was also the small matter of a five-wickets haul by Botham at Leicester, notable if only because it seems a rare event these days, almost as rare as a Somerset victory.

PORTSMOUTH: Hampshire (4pts) Gordon Greenidge, who in recent years must have brought as much pleasure to spectators as any of the overseas players in English cricket, had the satisfaction of making a century in his benefit match against Surrey yesterday. He shared a belligerent partnership with Jesty as Hampshire made 292 for 1, their highest total in the John Player League, to gain an overwhelming

Greenidge and Jesty added 269 in 35 overs, and, until the last five overs, it was orthodox stroke-mak-ing too, with controlled aggression the keynote as opposed to indis-criminate hitting. The only positive chance offered by either man came when Jesty was 124 and a figree hook off Clarke was put down by fine leg standing half way to the

From the start, Greenidge clearly had his sights set on a big score. He off drove frequently but the ball was always kept on the ground; the exhibitanting losted hooks and square

Jack Richards, however, which, at 59, took him past Barry underlined his improved batting in Richards's record league aggregate for Hampshire of 4,770 rims; and near the end when he uppercut a bouncer from Clarke over the wicketkeeper's head for four.

Jesty's choice of stroke was more varied, with runs flowing from drives, pulls and cuts. He seemed to be outscoring Greenidge most of the time, reaching 102 when Greenidge was 78, and going on to claim 64 of the 96 runs which came in the last ten overs.

Surrey, who choose to field first, persevered bravely as the runs accumulated. Thomas hit Chris accumulated. Insulate Mr. Chis Smith's off stump as the betsman pushed forward, while Knight bowled steadily before the carnage reached its worst. The 6ft 8in Kent schoolboy from Margate, who is awaiting his A level results, was sixth in the Commonwealth Games. He did not enter the competition until the bar was at 2.09 metres but then he made unusual progress.

He took two attempts to clear 2.12 metres but immediately raised it to the record-breaking 2.25 and cleared that at his second attempt. After one try at 2.28, he called it a day and said: "I just did what I knew I was capable of and today it ali came right".

Among the junior girls, little Nicola Dilley showed the courage of a champion after being bundled out of the 800 metres. The 14-year old Bedford girl was bowled over with two other runners after 200 metres but bravely got to her feet and completed the course despite suffering a suspected dislocation of the left shoulder. She had set the fastest qualifying

Lions suffering a bout of foot and mouth

The British Lions 25-16 win over lively Counties side on Saturday, high owed much to some stocking by Ollie ampbell was overshadowed by yet tore astonishing happenings as "more members of the Lions panagement set off on a further tutburst about New Zealand in a tirade of bitterness equalled laly by Danie Craven in 1956 and landel Rogers of Wales in 1969, Willie John McBride, the Lions willie Joan McBride, the Lions wanager, slashed away at New yealand referees in a post-match research. New Zealand referees, including Keith Lawrence, he controlled the Counties match, the controlled the Counties match, here difficient, said McBride, in heir rulings about putting the ball and the strums, collapsed scrums and so here said, passing in a tackle, and so

The Lions, maintained McBride, now realised that because of the refereeing they have virtually got to twice as good to win a game in New Zealand as they would have to "ne at home."

Charan Fitzgerald, the Lions aptain, said: "We have to play the poposing team and the referee. We have been trying to conform to their nterpretations, which does not help us, and we shouldn't have 10. McBride said he had passed on his ecclings to the New Zealand Rugby his and would amplify these at the end of the tour.

Miss Rowell, from Ryarsh in Kent, was running only her fourth marathon, but finished more than five minutes ahead of her nearest challenger, Kathy Roberts, of Canada. Miss Rowell said: "I never expected to do so well. It was very hard. From half way, I was on my own and the two hills were really cough".

Britain's other medal winner was Geoff Turnbull, who collected the asked Cliff Temple, who coaches

Saturday a 1-1 draw against Scotland was sufficient. They did well, after surrendering four players to the senior squad, who play in a similar tournament in Cardiff this weekend. Ireland finished second, Scotland third and Wales fourth, Scotland's manager, Lee Cousins was pleasantly surprised by his sides performance yesterday against England, who snatched the lead in the second minute. Jennings took advantage of lapse of concentration in the Scottish defence and slipped Scotland Equalized in the 31st minute through Leiper from a short corner, and raised their game in the second half, well led in attack by Andrew Hay. The general impression was that there is little difference in standard among the first three teams. In the last match of the day, Ireland were a little too good for Wales, whom they defeated 3-1. The House of Lords reinstated the order of Mr Justice Dillon to that effect in unanimously uphold-ing the appeals of Hawker Siddeley Aviation Ltd and Hawker Siddeley Dynamics Ltd from the decision on December 6, 1982, of the Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Stephenson, Lord Justice Slade and Lord Justice Oliver) in favour of the respondents Hawker Siddeley Group plc.

Mr Andrew Park, QC, and Mr dwin Glasgow for the appellants: Mr D. C. Potter, QC, and Mr Alan Sebestyen for the respondents. LORD TEMPLEMAN said that the auestian was whether the former shareholders of the appellants whose shares were transferred by the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977 to British Aerospace on April 29, 1977 were entitled under section 25 of the Act for the period from January 1 to April 28, 1977 to a dividend equal to the certified net revenue for that period plus a tax credit equal to the advance corporation tax attributable to the dividend or whether the former shareholders were only entitled to a dividend of an amount which, together with the amount of the advance corporation lax attribu-table to the dividend, was equal to credit appropriate to the dividend.

The certified net revenue of the first appellant for the relevant period was £3.6m. Mr Justice Dillon decided that the respondent who was entitled to all the issued share capital of the appellant immediately before April 29, 1977 was entitled to a dividend of £2.4m and to a tax credit of £1.2m equal to the advance corporation tax attributable to the dividend of £2.4m.

The Court of Appeal reversed that decision and held that the respondent was entitled to a dividend of £3.6m and to a tax credit of £1.9m equal to the advance corporation tax attributable to the Sections 23 and 24 of the Act controlled the dividends permitted to be paid by the several companies, including the first appellants, whose shares were by section 19 trans-ferred to British Aerospace or British Shipbuilders. The control applied to the dividends paid between the safeguarding date of March 17, 1975 and the date of transfer which in relation to the first appellant was April 29, 1977.

Reides of Harrich and Lord

Reides of Harrich and Lord appellants corresponded to the calender year and therefore they had four periods of control, namely the financial years ending December 31. 1974, 1975 and 1976 and the final

> Section 25 of the Act directed that as soon as possible after April 29, 1977 there should be paid to the respondent, the sole shareholder of the first appellant immediately before that date "payments of dividend for the final financial period... of such amounts as to ensure that the aggregate payments of dividend for that period ... are equal to the maximum amounts

The final financial period was defined by section 25(4) as such part of the financial year during which the date of transfer, namely April 29, 1977, occurred as preceded that

Thus the respondent became entitled to dividends up to the prescribed maximum in respect of the first appellant's activities during the final financial period between January 1 and April 28, 1977. The dividends could not be group dividends because section 25 only operated after the first appellants ceased to be the subsidiary company of the respondent.

distributions equal in amount to the franked payments permitted by section 24 of which qualifying for paying under section 25 qualifying distributions equal in group dividends were irrelevant to section 25 and second because qualifying distributions and group dividends were mutually incompar ted" under section 24 of dividends which were qualifying distributions for the final financial period of the first appellant were £2.4m which first appellant were £2.4m which together with the advance corporation tax of £1.2m attributable to that distribution constituted the maximum franked payments of £3.6m permitted by section 24. Mr Justice Dillon was therefore correct in his decision, and the appeal was

Occupier under no duty to prevent trespassers from burgling neighbours

London Borough Council Lord Justice Waller: Lord Justice Oliver and Lord Justice Goff [Judgment delivered June 30]

There was no duty upon occupiers of premises so to protect their own premises as to prevent third parties over whom they had no control from custering their neighbour's premises.

The Court of Appeal so held, allowing an appeal by the defendants. the London Borough of Camden against a decision on March 25. 1982 of Mr Barry Chedlow, QC, sitting as deputy High Court jurke (The Times, April 1, 1982) who awarded damages of £12,338 to the plaintiffs. LORD JUSTICE WALLER said m a reserved judgment that the defendants owned Nos 142 and 144 Southampton Row. London. The plain tiffs were the tenants of

No 142 and used the basement for storage of clothing in connexion with their business. The basement of No 1:14 which was unoccupied was sepa rated from the basement of No 142 by an 18-in wall with no direct means of communication.

There, were no locks on the front door of No 144 and the door leading into the basement was off its hinges. Tramps and vagrants had been seen in the premises and there had also been a word businesses. been s averal burglaries.

There had been a number of complaints to the defendants about the lick of security but nothing had been done about it. On May 22, 1977' thieves knocked a hole into the common basement wall between the two premises and through that hole a slim person was able to climb and steril over 700 garments.

The judge held that there was an absence of reasonable care on the part of the defendants in that they had continuously neglected to supply a secure structure and should have known that vandals, tramps and undesirables were continuously on the premises and therefore it should have been foreseen that damage would ensue.

defendants' knowledge of the valuable goods held in the plaintiffs' premises, the presence of unautho-rized persons in No 144 and the state of the doors and locks were such that the break-in and their were foresceable rendering the defendants liable.

Putting on weight again

After four years of cut-backs in Edward Fennell reports an recruitment, local government is starting to put back some of its weight. Employment within local increase in professional vacancies on local councils

The Times guide to career development

the health of many vital services. In any case the atmosphere in local authorities has changed. The new awareness of efficient management of resources has alerted many councils of the fact that it may imes be cheaper to employ more staff rather than to continue with expensive capital projects. For example care of the elderly in the community is cheaper than in council-run homes and hostels although it does involve employing greater number of social workers. Local government now sees itself in a more dynamic role than in the past. In places such as Sheffield and the Greater London Council it stems from a party political idealogy. But even in Conservative shire authorities the scope of activities is broadening.

According to Alan Fowler who heads up the Manpower Services Unit for Hampshire County Council - the largest non-metropolitan authority in country - many councils now feel that they have the chance, or the responsibility, to get involved in schemes which are of benefit to the community but are beyond their traditional activities. A wide range of conservation, educational and social projects employing considerable numbers are now operation within local authorities under the auspices of the community programme. The likelihood is that these will grow and become fixtures since they are both worthwhile in themselves and con-

Industrial resencration is also becoming a priority. Hampshire, like many other authorities, has recently sponsored a unit to go out and sell the country, particularly abroad, as an ideal place for new industry. "The council feels that it has a responsibility for the economic health of the community ans so there is now a team marketing the country to overseas investors," days Mr Fowler.

This all seems a long way away from the traditional stick-in-the-mud image of town hall politics. And where local government has had a lack fostre image compared even with the Civil Service, Alan Fowler sees it becoming more attractive to the ambitious. "You don't have to make your career entirely in local government now because there is a growing two way flow with the private sector. And unlike the Civil Service, where the general administrators hold the top jobs, heads of department in local government are always profesonals in their own right which means career

Be prepared to be kept waiting. The disorganized interviewer often starts late. Use the time to calm down, read the company literature, go over your couriculum vitae or talk to other candidates: 克朗克特特 14

A bad interviewer can seem positively hostile towards the normal, sensitive applicant. When I went to my appointments board for advice on a second job after four years as a personnel officer, I was asked "Why did you go into personnel management after taking your degree? Only the throw-outs did that". The phrase has lingered after many years! Your interviewer may seem aggressive: "Why are you suddenly thinking of going into mining/retailing/the motor industry when you read philosophy/ concentrated on languages? Marjorie Harris offers some tips on coping with an inexperienced interviewer interviewer may be nervous and inexperienced. Don't let him make. you feel inadequate. Answer what seem unnecessary personal questions politely but firmly.

Even a well-trained interviewer can have an off day. He does not seem to have read your application form and asks you to repeat details you have already provided in full. If possible elaborate on what you wrote, make the point that you are adding information and pause so that with luck he will note it down.

He may allow colleagues to burst in on what should be a private meeting or even make long telephone calls. Endure interruptions patiently -they may give you some idea of the firm. Simply listen to what is being said over your head but be ready to speak if you are suddenly asked for an

The interview may seem too brief and casual; the interviewer may appeal to over-sell a routine job; or he may do all the talking and endlessly extol the wonders of his firm; worse, he may run it down. Even he should ask if you have any questions or at least will have to pause for breath Seize your chance, eg "you mentioned earlier ... could I just add that that ..." or "Although my qualifications/degree subjects do not seem directly linked with this appointment, the would help me to analyse the they would help me to analyse the work you have outlined/take advan-tage of your training scheme/bring a practical approach to the job.

You should not expect red carpet treatment from every firm you apply to but, if you have to face a poor interviewer, or one who subjects you to the generally discredited "stress" interview to see how you react, you may over-hastily decide that you do not want to work there anyway. It is worth realizing that you are unlikely, except in a tiny firm, to be working for the preliminary interviewer. If you seem promising, he will refer you to the person who would be your boss. This gives you a second chance to ask questions about what you would actually do. Base your judgment on the interest and suitability of the job: the characteristics of the person to whom you would be responsible are secondary. Make full use of this opportunity to supplement what you have not been told by the interviewer and to redress his sins of omission by speaking positively about yourself.

Prior casts shadow over vote on hanging

concerned they would be more inclined, to remain silent." He went on: "The valuable information and evidence which has recently begun to flow from converted terrists, sometimes described as supergrasses, would be jeopardized if people knew their former colleagues might hang." Mr Prior said that far from deterring terrorism, executions would well lead to more acts of vengeance, killings and atrocitics against members of the security forces and others on a substantial scale.

He said that after opposing capital punishment for many years he had voted for the return of the death penalty for terrorists in 1975, but recognized that within a short time this was a mistaken and emotional response", Long before he was closely associated with the affairs of Northern Ireland he had reverted to his former position.

The return of hanging would give the IRA more chances to use the skill they had demonstrated at turning terrorists into martyrs and drawing strength and support from executions.

He said the statistics showed why Northern Ireland considerations were crucial. If capital punishment had existed for six years there would have been 19 cases in Northern Ireland for every one in England and

Wales,

Dr Garret Fitzgerald, the Irish Prime Minister, said yesterday it would be a disastrous mistake to bring back the death penalty in Britain. It would lead to violence and death in Northern Ireland (our Dublin Correspondent writes). Joe Cahill, former IRA leader, once reprieved only three days before his execution. said that the reintroduction of hanging would be no deterrent to "freedom fighters".

 If captial punishment is reintroduced, prison governors strongly against will resign from the service. Mr Brittan was told in a letter from the governors's branch of the Society of Civil and Public Servants (our Home Affairs Correspondent writes).

If hanging does come back the governors will want to play no part in it. As forecast in The Times last Monday, "the vast majority of our members are voicing the gravest reservations." Moral majority, page 10

Hanging: The fundamental arguments

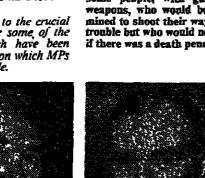

The House of Commons will decide on Wednesday - after an increasingly vociferous public debate - whether to restore capital punishment 14 years after its abolition.

MONDAY JULY 11 1983

According to all the recent surveys the outcome will be very close and could rest with a small group of MPs who have yet to make up their minds, or who have not disclosed their

According to Mr Leon Brittan, the Home Secretary. public opinion will play a crucial role in the Commons debate. The wide spread of views on hanging that will be enunciated in Parliament have been well rehearsed in recent weeeks, with the Church judiciary, police, prison officers and penal reform groups among those who have lobbied

In the run-up to the crucial debate these are some of the arguments which have been expressed - and on which MPs will have to decide.

Lord Brooke of Cumnor Mr Albert Pierrepoint, Conservative Home Secretary from 1962 to 1964 I was the last Home Secretary to consider death sentences. Before I took office I thought hanging was a uniquely powerful deterrent. After two years,

The pro-hanging lobby talks of death for terrorist crimes but then the whole problem of definition arises. A man's life can't be based on the drawing

I found it quite ineffective.

In all I considered 12 cases given the death sentence. Six were reprieved and six went ahead. The moment of execution wasn't the most intense, rather the actual signing

As Home Secretary I didn't shirk my duty and I think one person - rather than a committee - should be responsible for such decisions if that is the law of the land. But during my term of office, my opinions on the merits of hanging changed enormously.

Mrs Margaret Thatcher

(during the election campaign)

- I believe a majority of people in this country would vote for the restoration of the death penalty. I, too, would do that, and have always done so when it comes up in Parliament, because I believe there are some people, with guns and weapons, who would be determined to shoot their way out of trouble but who would not do so if there was a death penalty.

- We have gone too far for capital punishment to be of any help now. The death penalty never once acted as a deterrent in all the jobs I carried out. If an IRA terrorist eye for an eye works anymore.

Mr Roy Hattersley Shadow Home Secretary

- I am opposed to the return of capital punishment - opposed principle and opposed without reservation. The state does not possess the moral right to take the life of a man or woman. Even if the death penalty were a deterrent, I would be opposed to its reintroduction, but there is no conclusive evidence to support view that a return to judicial execution would reduce either the murder rate or the number of violent crimes.

Dr John Habgood,

new Archbishop of York

- I very much hope the House of Commons will decisively reject hanging. I can understand the pressures that lead people to want it. But I believe that deliberately to kill people in cold blood - and that is what hanging is - is debuman-ising to all involved. I don't believe that hanging will in the least diminish the perils of terrorism and I believe that penalty would make it harder to convict criminals. If capital punishment meant that unanimous jury verdicts were to be the only acceptable verdicts again the consequences for maintaining law and order would be disastrous. The way to reduce deliberate crime is not the severity of sentence but the probability of being caught and convicted.

Mr Peter Tanner. Police Federation secretary

- The overwhelming view of the police service is that capital punishment should be restored for murder. We accept there are degrees of murder and we are not saying all persons convicted of homi-cide should suffer the death penalty. In an increasingly violent society the state must be empowered to decide that, in some cases, the only adequate punishment is the death penalty.

-No causal link has been proved between the abolition in 1969 and the murder rate, No experience has shown that hanging had a deterrent effect. Letter from Kampala gunfire that used to echo round Kampala a year or two ago is gone, but the discothe-ques and bats ensure that sleepless nights persist.

Bats and discos in the tropical night

The discos operate mainly at weekends, and go on well into the early morning hours. They have efficient equip-ment, and the volume at which it is operated makes the music clearly audible for half a mile or more in the otherwise still tropical night.

The bats - enormous African fruit bats with a wingspan of around 2ft weigh down the trees in parts of central Kampala. During the day their squeaking fills the air, but dies down at dusk when they take off in their hundreds of thousands and head across the city for some unknown destination.

The bats start to return to their roosts around 4am, and the noise of their squeaking takes over soon after the discos close.

No one seems to know why they have invaded central Kampala. They appear to have moved in in the last few months, and now festoon the branches of the trees which formerly housed some of Uganda's colourful birds. They are no substitute for the birds, unless you happen to be a bat lover.

In many other respects, Kampala is now a much easier place to live in, although there are problems. Both Kenya Airways and Uganda Airlines fly in here from Nairobi, but their tickets are not inter-changeable, and there is a serious shortage of hotel accommodation because the 300-room Apolo Hotel has been closed for the last couple years awaiting rehabili-

No one seems to know when the Apolo Hotel, 16 storeys high and set on an imposing site overlooking the centre of the city, will again open its doors for guests. In the meantime, the nearby Imperial and Speke Hotels are operating, but are frequently Securing a hotal room does

The main market, its stalls filled with good-looking fruit, vegetables, groundaints and other items, is bustling with people. Small shops in the surrounding streets sell clothing, groceries and many other lines. A few modern supermarkets are well stocked, and even display things like soap powder, torch batteries and tinged foods, with prices clearly marked. Imported whisky and gin are prominently displayed

Large sections of the main street are empty and derelici, where shops were looted and set on fire in the 1979 war to oust ldi Amin, Many of the formerly attractive bouses in the residential areas near by also await rebuilding. A few Asians have returned and are running businesses here. But the official process to return their property or to pay them compensation is only now getting under way.

The Uganda Government

now has a substantial number of claims from the Asians, after introducing new legislation last year, and the next step appears to be to sort them out and assess them. Many Ugandans do not want to see a mass return of Asians to their country, and are unhappy about the prospect. But it looks like being many months before decisions can be expected on the Asian's applications and nobody knows whether they will eventually accept the terms on which their property may be offered back to them, In the meantime, Ugandans continue to occupy former Asian shops, offices and houses.

The papers

The Government's recently an-nounced package of spending cuts came under attack in both The came under attack in doin The Sounday Times and The Observer yesterday. Both newspapers accuse the Government, and Mrs Thatcher in particular, of "political tinkering" with last February's public expendi-ture which indicated a higher level of spending than was actually being of spending than was actions of the planned. The Sanday Times said the Prime Minister had always espoused the virtues of honesty and consistency, and the fact that she should now be "caught red-handed, fine-tuning the economy to the Tories political advantage, sticks in he throat". According to The Observer the spending cuts left the Government with "egg on its face". The Sunday Telegraph declared itself to be on balance against the
